

"The World Today"

by John Welton

© 2003

When I look around and see the state of the world today I try to imagine something profound to say that would change the state of the world today if I could I would sing it in a song but there's so many things to say I don't know where to start so I'll search my soul and listen to my heart and in my heart's rhythm I hear words of wisdom these words I say unto you

Let the love grow from here to everywhere I can feel changes in the air, it's in the air Let the love flow from us to them before the world we know comes to an end

When I sit down and turn on the evening news I try to look away because it gives me the blues even when I turn it off it's still going on there's a war that we can't ignore what ever happened to the golden rule why are there metal detectors in the elementary schools? the children of tomorrow are the ones who'll pay for the mistakes we make today

All over the world people are living in sorrow scared to die today, afraid to live to see tomorrow it's part of life I know it happens everyday but deep inside we all know there's got to be a better way

When i look around and see the state of the world today
I try to imagine something profound to say
that would change the state of the world today if I could would sing it in a song....